Agriculture risk management education continues to be a priority for the Northeast Extension Risk Management Education Center (NERME). Since its inception in 2001, NERME has supported educators in the region who provide risk management education programs to producers in their communities, striving to keep agriculture viable and profitable. We understand that over time, risk management needs change. In light of that, NERME will be holding a virtual, regional Stakeholder Listening Session. The goal – to gather information that will inform NERME and its Advisory Council of the current and potential future educational needs of northeast producers and their families.
